Review of the cooking course: sustainable nutrition

- Cooking sustainably means taking good planning into account when cooking. Which foods do I need to use? Can I swap foods in a recipe to make a dish more climate-friendly?
- Every time you avoid meat, your dish is many times more environmentally friendly.
- Sustainable also means using leftovers and not throwing them away, e.g. pasta can be turned into pasta salad, leftover jacket potatoes into roast potatoes, etc.
- A few regularly made basics will make your daily cooking easier, e.g. pesto, vegetable seasoning, hummus, bread dough, vinaigrette, etc.
- Use leftover peelings from carrots, potatoes, etc. to make vegetable stock or crisps. (Zero Waste)
- If you churn butter from cream, buttermilk is a by-product. You can mix it with juices or use it for baking.
- If you make your own butter, it produces significantly less CO² equivalents than bought butter. See www.umweltbundesamt.de
- Keep your shopping climate-friendly and plan your meals: buy in bulk once a week/ buy unpackaged fruit and vegetables.
